JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

By way of a Notice of Motion in Enclosure (2a) the applicant is moving this Court to invoke its power under rule 137 of the Rules of the Federal Court 1995 ["RFC"] to review and to set aside the order made by the Court of Appeal on 30 October 2007 in Criminal Appeal No. W-09-31-2003. The applicant is also seeking the inherent powers of this Court under rule 137 RFC for an order that the Kuala Lumpur High Court Criminal Appeal No. 42-44-1998 be heard on its merits. This application has been dismissed. We now give our reasons.

The applicant was charged at the Sessions Court for an offence under section 377D of the Penal Code as follows:

“Bahawa kamu, dalam bulan Mac 1993, pada sebelah malam, di No. 8, Jalan Setia Murni 1, Bukit Damansara, dalam Wilayah Persekutuan, Kuala Lumpur telah melakukan perbuatan kelucahan melampau dengan Dato’ Seri Anwar Ibrahim dengan membenarkan Dato’ Seri Anwar Ibrahim memasukkan zakarnya ke dalam dubur kamu dan oleh yang demikian kamu telah melakukan satu kesalahan yang boleh dihukum di bawah Seksyen 377D Kanun Keseksaan.”

The applicant pleaded guilty to the said charge and was convicted and sentenced on 19 September 1998 by the learned Judge of the Sessions Court Kuala Lumpur to six months imprisonment with effect from the date of arrest.

On 29 September 1998, the applicant filed a Notice of Appeal in the High Court in Criminal Appeal No. 42-44-1998 against the decision made by the Sessions Court. On 9 September 2003, the learned High Court Judge, in exercising his powers under section 313(2) of the Criminal Procedure Code [“CPC”] refused to consider the appeal and thereafter dismissed the appeal on the basis of the absence of the applicant on the day fixed for the hearing of the appeal.

On 11 September 2003, the applicant filed a Notice of Appeal in the Court of Appeal in Criminal Appeal No. W-09-31-2003 against the decision of the High Court and the Court of Appeal upon hearing the appeal by the applicant dismissed the appeal on 30 October 2007.

Based on the affidavit in support of the application, it is clear that the applicant is seeking to relitigate on an issue pertaining to the conviction and sentence meted out on the applicant on his own admission of guilt.

Learned Counsel for the applicant in his submission on the issue of whether the application is properly before this Court and as to whether this Court has jurisdiction to hear it has referred to us the case of Tan Sri Eric Chia Eng Hock v. P.P. (2007) 1 CLJ 565 wherein the Federal Court then went on to rule that it could consider the appellant's motion under rule 137 RFC in a matter which arose out of a Kuala Lumpur Sessions Court Criminal trial. Learned Counsel for the applicant further submitted that the power of the Federal Court to hear any application or to make any order as may be necessary to prevent injustice under rule 137 has been recognized in a plethora of cases and he cited the cases of (1) Ngan Tuck Seng & Anor. v. Ngan Yin Hoi (1999) 5 MLJ 509 (2) R. Rama Chandran v. The Industrial Court of Malaysia & Anor. (1997) 1 MLJ 145.

Although mindful of the later decision of the Federal Court in Sia Cheng Soon & Anor. v. Tengku Ismail bin Tengku Ibrahim (2008) 5 CLJ 201 wherein the Federal Court refused to consider a civil application under rule 137 arising from a Sessions Court civil action on the grounds that it had no jurisdiction to do so and that the inherent power under rule 137 was “limited” to review of the Federal Court decisions only, learned Counsel for the applicant contended that several distinguishing features and observation can be made between Eric Chia’s case and Sia Cheng Soon’s case as follows:

- (1) Sia Cheng Soon was a three member coram that did not overrule the five member decision in Eric Chia;
- (2) Sia Cheng Soon recognized that the Federal Court concerns itself with “points of law”;
- (3) Sia Cheng Soon did not concern any issue of violations of fundamental rights or constitutional safeguards, the denial e.g. for a full and fair hearing;
- (4) Sia Cheng Soon was a matter that had been fully heard, argued and considered in all the Courts below the Federal Court; and
- (5) In Sia Cheng Soon there had been an earlier application made for leave to appeal from the Court of Appeal which application had been dismissed.

It is also the submission made on behalf of the applicant that there are now conflicting Federal Court decisions on the scope and applicability of rule 137 and the Court’s inherent power to matters originating from the Subordinate Courts and that the case of Eric Chia has not been overruled and is a correct statement of the law in so far as rule 137 is concerned.

As to the above contention and arguments made by learned Counsel for the applicant, with respect we could not agree with him. We are of the view since the case of the applicant originated from the Sessions Court and the High Court had heard this case in its appellate capacity and not acting under its original jurisdiction and wherein the applicant had exhausted his rights of appeal at the Court of Appeal, it therefore follows that the Federal Court could not deal with this matter for want of jurisdiction as stipulated under section 87 of the Courts of Judicature Act 1964 ["CJA"]. Section 87 of the CJA provides as follows:

"87. Jurisdiction to hear and determine criminal appeals

- (1) The Federal Court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any appeal from any decision of the Court of Appeal in its appellate jurisdiction in respect of any criminal matter decided by the High Court in its original jurisdiction subject to any rules regulating the proceedings of the Federal Court in respect of appeals from the Court of Appeal.*

- (3) An appeal may lie on a question of fact or a question of law or on a question of mixed fact and law.”

In view of the above provisions in section 87 of the CJA, the Federal Court is only reposed with the jurisdiction to hear an appeal from the decision “in respect of any criminal matter decided by the High Court in its original jurisdiction”. [Emphasis Added]. On this point in the case of Sia Cheng Soon & Anor. v. Tengku Ismail bin Tengku Ibrahim [supra] his lordship Zaki Tun Azmi, PCA [as he then was] in his judgment had succinctly stated at page 215 (paragraphs 34, 35 and 36) as follows:

“Section 87 relates to the Federal Court’s jurisdiction to hear and determine criminal appeals. This section allows appeals of any criminal matter decided by the High Court in its original jurisdiction only. It does not provide for appeals in criminal appeals originating in the subordinate courts. [paragraph 34]

According to section 50(1), criminal cases decided by the Sessions Court may be appealed up to the Court of Appeal... . Section 50 read with section 87 means that, criminal matters originating in the Sessions Court..... must end at the Court of Appeal. [paragraph 35]

I do not read rule 137 as meaning to provide another avenue to bring a case originating in the Subordinate Court to the Federal Court. On an important matter as right of appeal these sections being provisions passed by Parliament, cannot now be read as being subject to a procedural rule 137 made by the Rules Committee. A right of Appeal is a substantive right, not a procedural right. [paragraph 36].”

As regards the case of Tan Sri Eric Chia Eng Hock v. P.P. [supra] relied on by the applicant, it is to be noted even the Federal Court then explained that the appellant could not proceed with his appeal to the Federal Court for want of jurisdiction under section 87 of the CJA. His lordship Augustine Paul, FCJ in delivering the judgment of the Court had this to say:

“My answer therefore to the primary question is that an exercise of revisionary power by a High Court Judge is not an exercise of an original jurisdiction so as to bring it within the ambits of section 87 of the CJA.

For the above reasons, the notice of appeal filed by the accused in this court is therefore struck out for want of jurisdiction under section 87 of the CJA.”

It is our considered view in the absence of jurisdiction such as provided by section 87 of the CJA, rule 137 RFC being a procedural law, could not be invoked to confer jurisdiction to the Federal Court to review a case. It must be stated here however that the Federal Court had consistently emphasized that rule 137 could be invoked only in limited circumstances. In MGG Pillai v. Tan Sri Dato' Vincent Tan Chee Yioun [2002] 2 MLJ 673 at page 685 the Federal Court with reference to rule 137 explained that:

“For the reasons stated, I hold the view that the Federal Court does have the inherent jurisdiction and power which can be invoked in limited circumstances to reopen, rehear and reexamine its previous judgment, decision or order which has been obtained by fraud or suppression of material evidence so as to prevent injustice or an abuse of the process of the Court.”

Based on the above statement of the law made by the Federal Court and reverting back to the factual circumstances of the present application, it is our considered view to relitigate a case which has been heard and disposed of by the apex court, i.e. the Court of Appeal, is therefore not one of the circumstances envisaged by rule 137 for this Court [the Federal Court] to entertain.

It must be noted that the said rule 137 RFC has been promulgated primarily for the purpose of regulating the practice and procedure to be followed by the Federal Court in all causes or matters in or with respect to which the Federal Court has for the time being jurisdiction. Jurisdiction denotes the scope or authority over a subject matter which the court may deal with. The court may then exercise its power in relation and pursuant to that jurisdiction. In this context, in the case of Abdul Ghaffar Md. Amin v. Ibrahim Yusoff & Anor. [2008] 5 CLJ 1, the Federal Court referred to the case of Lee Lee Cheng (f) v. Seow Peng Kwang [1960] 26 MLJ 1 wherein the Court explained the difference in the terms “jurisdiction” and “power” as follows:

“It is axiomatic that when different words are used in a statute they refer to different things and this is particularly so where the different words are, as here used repeatedly. This leads to the view that in the Ordinance there is a distinction between the jurisdiction of a Court and its powers, and this suggests that the word ‘jurisdiction’ is used to denote the types of subject matter which the Court may deal with and in relation to which it may exercise its powers. It cannot exercise its powers in matters over which, by reason of their nature or by reason of extra-territoriality, it has no jurisdiction. On the other hand, in dealing with matters over which it has jurisdiction, it cannot exceed its powers.”

From the principles as explained above, it could be gathered that the exercise of any power by the court must as a matter of course flow from the jurisdiction vested in the court and not otherwise.

Still on the issue of whether this Court has the jurisdiction to hear the applicant's present application under rule 137 RFC, learned Counsel for the applicant made an alternative submission that should this Court be of the view that the capital "C" for Court restricts rule 137 to the Federal Court then such limitation or qualification, if at all it is there, is limited to the second limb of "abuse of the process of the Court". It was further submitted that the disjunctive "or" between the words "prevent injustice" and "prevent an abuse of the process of the Court" will permit of a wider and more liberal interpretation to the power to correct an injustice.

With utmost respect to the above contention of learned Counsel for the applicant, we could not agree with him. On this point, we are more persuaded by the reasoning of the Federal Court in the case of Sia Cheng Soon & Anor. v. Tengku Ismail bin Tengku Ibrahim [supra]. His lordship Zaki Tun Azmi, PCA [as he then was] inter alia stated that the "Court" mentioned in the content of "to prevent an abuse of the process of the Court" is spelt with a capital "C". Rule 2 of the RFC defined the word "Court" (also with capital "C") to mean the Federal Court and includes a judge of that Court. It was further decided that the word "the Court" by the use of the capital "C" and the definition given to that word in the Rules must mean the Federal Court. In the same case Arifin Zakaria, FCJ [as he then was] at page 219 paragraphs 49 and 50 decided that the rule in rule 137 RFC merely declares ".....that nothing in these Rules shall be deemed to limit or alter the inherent powers of the Court." The word "Court" here is defined as the Federal Court (Rule 2). His lordship then went on to state that the rule does not confer an inherent power, it merely declares that the Court has such a power.

We are therefore of the view on the issue of whether this Court has the jurisdiction to hear the applicant's application, it is patently clear that there is no room to invoke rule 137 of RFC and on this ground alone the applicant's application should be dismissed.

Learned Counsel for the applicant in his submission before this Court had also argued at great length on the scope of section 313(2) of the CPC and on the constitutional right of a litigant to a right of hearing. It was contended for the applicant that both the High Court and the Court of Appeal in the present case had erred in the failure to properly consider and apply section 313(2) of CPC. Simply for this reason to ascertain whether in fact the High Court and the Court of Appeal had erred, we would take the liberty here to deal with this issue, notwithstanding that we had earlier ruled that this Court does not have the jurisdiction to hear the plaintiff's application under rule 137 of RFC.

Section 313(2) CPC in so far as it applies to the instant matter provides:

“(1) .....

(2) If the appellant does not appear to support his appeal the Court may consider his appeal and make such order thereon as it thinks fit:

Provided that the Court may refuse to consider the appeal or to make any such order in the case of an appellant who is out of the jurisdiction ....., except on such terms as it thinks fit to impose.”

It is the submission of learned Counsel for the applicant that even if the applicant as the appellant is absent the Court can consider an appeal and that to consider an appeal it must mean to consider it on its merits. It is the contention made on behalf of the applicant that the Court has no power to arbitrarily dismiss an appeal without considering it on merits, but if the absent appellant is out of jurisdiction then the Court can refuse to consider the appeal unless and until the absent appellant complies with such terms the Court has seen fit to impose. Learned Counsel for the applicant also submitted to us that the prayer of the applicant is not to set aside the conviction but to allow him the opportunity of having his appeal argued on its merits in the High Court.

Again, we could not agree with the submission made on behalf of the applicant on the interpretation of the scope of section 313(2) CPC and its application to the present case. We are of the view that the learned Judge of the High Court had carefully considered the scope and application of section 313(2) CPC in his well written Judgment. The learned Judge had stated in his judgment amongst others the reason why he had to dismiss the applicant's appeal without hearing its merits. The learned Judge was of the view that since the applicant had failed to appear personally in Court for his appeal to be heard on several occasions whereby the hearing of the appeal had to be repeatedly postponed, this would be a ground to justify the dismissal of the applicant's appeal. On this point the learned Judge cited the case of Hayati Bte. Aizan v. P.P. [2000] 1 MLJ 359 in which his lordship Augustine Paul, J [as he then was] had this to say:

“In the appeal before me, the appellant had failed to appear personally in Court on five occasions in pursuance of a condition upon which she was admitted to bail. It would be an abuse of the process of the Court to adjourn the hearing of the appeal any further. I was therefore of the view that the discretion must be exercised in favour of the application made by the prosecution to dismiss the appeal. Thus I dismissed the appeal.”

The learned Judge of the High Court also discussed on what would be the resultant effect of the hearing of the applicant's appeal in his absence and the powers vested in the Court at the hearing of an appeal. The learned Judge took into consideration of the fact that the applicant is out of jurisdiction (for being outside the country) and the Court having the revisionary powers on appeal to impose a heavier sentence if the Court finds the six (6) months imprisonment meted out on the applicant is manifestly inadequate even though the Public Prosecutor did not appeal against the sentence. It is for this reason that the learned Judge concluded that it was incorrect for learned Counsel for the applicant to contend that just because the applicant had gone through the trial process before the Sessions Court and had served his sentence that he did not have to appear. The learned Judge anticipated the possibility of enhancing the sentence passed on the applicant but the powers to enhance the sentence cannot be carried out in the absence of the applicant as he has the right to be heard. To the Court the presence of the applicant at the hearing of the appeal is of paramount importance, but for his repeated absence it would be justified for the Court to exercise its discretion to dismiss the appeal without considering its merits.

Finally, it is noted that in dismissing the appeal the learned Judge of the High Court had given due consideration to the fact that the appeal by the applicant was in relation to the applicant's conviction and sentence upon his own plea of guilt under section 305 of CPC. Under the said provision of section 305 of CPC the applicant cannot appeal against the conviction except as to the extent or legality of the sentence. Having referred to the procedure and principles of law as laid down in the Supreme Court's case of Lee Weng Tuck & Anor. v. P.P. [1989] 2 MLJ 143 the learned Judge found that the recording of the plea of guilt made by the applicant was in order and according to law. From the Records of Appeal available before him there was nothing to show that the proceedings before the Sessions Court where the applicant had pleaded guilty was conducted not in accordance with the procedure and principles laid down in Lee Weng Tuck's case.

For the reasons above stated we are in agreement with the conclusion arrived by the learned Judge of the High Court that to allow the hearing of the appeal of the applicant in his absence would tantamount to an abuse of the process of the Court. In the exercise of the discretionary power under section 313(2) CPC the learned Judge was therefore justified in refusing to consider the appeal and in dismissing the appeal.

Accordingly, in the circumstances of the case we would dismiss the applicant's application in Enclosure (2a).
